Stuttgart's main station (Hauptbahnhof) is currently a big construction site. When you arrive at the dead-end station, there are two corridors leading towards the main hall. Take either of them. From the main hall, you can either take the north exit (Nordausgang) on your right and follow the footprints, with a white S (for S-Bahn) on green circular ground, on the floor. Or you take the south exit (Südausgang) straight ahead of the big corridor leading from the platforms 15,16 to the main hall. Go down two stairs to arrive in Klett-Passage. Then you turn right and follow the signs for the S-Bahn (white S on green circular ground).

Before you enter the train, you will have to buy a Ticket for 2 zones. There are red or orange vending machines in the main hall and in Klett-Passage. Each of them, irrespective of the colour, will sell you a ticket to the university. You need about 2,70 Euro in cash. (You can also buy a ticket for four rides which is slightly cheaper than four single tickets. Before using this ticket you have to stamp it at a small machine in orange colour, on top of the last flight of stairs before the S-Bahn platforms. A single ticket does not need to be stamped.)

If you find yourself lost, just ask any of the many DB Service people in red jackets standing at almost every corner.

Every 10 minutes there is an S-Bahn to University, leaving at .05, .15, .25 and so on. These are S1 (direction Herrenberg), S2 (direction Filderstadt) or S3 (direction Flughafen/Messe), leaving from platform 101. It will take about 10 minutes to the underground station Stuttgart Universität. Leave the underground station on the signposted side of the university (the back of the train in direction of travel). There is an elevator at the very end of the platform on the university side. If you use the stairs, you will notice that the number of steps is quite big.

Once you have left the station, you are in the centre of the campus. Looking around you won't believe that this university has been famous for its school of architecture. Two of these buildings in the style of the 1970s stand out by being bigger and taller. One of these, Pfaffenwaldring 55, is just next to the station. On its ground floor there is a library. Just behind that building is its clone, Pfaffenwaldring 57. Proceed to Pfaffenwaldring 57, passing a small building with a branch of a bank. Turning left after the bank, there are two entrances to 57, one with three blue elevators and another one with three green elevators. Take any of these to the seventh floor. On the seventh floor, the reception is in room 7.527. When leaving the elevators you turn left (or south, if that helps). Office numbers are 1.. (near the blue elevator), 3.. (in between) and 5.. (near the green elevator). Walk through the main corridor and turn left shortly after the (last) glass door. You now find yourself in front of seminar room 7.527.

The walk from the station to the reception should not take much longer than reading these instructions, 5 to 10 minutes.
